As an Lr user, this version doesn’t really bring a lot of new features, just an evolution of the basic functionality. A lot of it is more intuitive. I remember a while back coming across tips on how to take advantage of the smart collections of trays which were basically your still frames from each shoot. The new trait library is a great new feature and is super straight forward to use, at least from my experience. The one thing I don’t like is that when you make a new border via the border as a new pattern, it adds the pattern to the gallery so they come up as a blank patch. Not sure why? Anyways, I agree with the previous posters. I feel the LR5.1.5 which I downloaded a few days back is the best version of Lightroom right now. And I have almost 1200 images (files and virtual slides). I think the LR5.1.5 introduced in today’s release will be the last update for a while, since the previous versions aren’t slated for further updates. Maybe not that long ago, but I haven’t used Lightroom since LR5 originally. I am really looking forward to downloading the next version as soon as they make the beta available.
